To Whom It May Concern:

I'm writing this as a letter of championship, heartedly encouraging whatever support you are considering to bring to the table regarding Dom (DB) Morgan. There are few people I would take the time to truly champion, and he is one of them.

I've worked in the international film, television, music video and theatre world for 35 years, have had the pleasure of winning myriad awards for my varied and eclectic works, and I know my craft inside and out. So when I champion someone it comes from a deep place of recognizing real talent, and beyond that, true heart, rarity in an industry that can be a brutal place to navigate.

What I love about DB and where he stands out in that brutal world, is not only his hard-won passion and true gift at story telling, but his determination to build others into that universe who would not normally be given a chance. The community spirit he brings to everything he involves himself with, and the grounded, active encouragement of those usually discarded to the sidelines, makes him a truly one-of-a-kind Creative Hero that deserves whatever support it is that can be found.

More recently for myself, it has been an extreme pleasure to have been involved with his film projects as Artistic Executive and Mentor, bringing my hands-on skills and knowledge to set - and in the mix, meet (and subsequently employ myself) the various creative forces that he has the additional rare talent of spotting and nurturing.

I think you know how rare it is to have this kind of personal vision and commitment, combined with a vision and commitment that expands to the practical encouragement, training, and illumination of others along the way.

I expect to be working with him soon again, and with the many creative forces that have struggled in their various challenging starts to life - who have happily found one of the most inspiring creative homes I've come across in my 3 1/2 decades of experience.

I've provided some links below for you to get a small inkling of what I'm about, and please don't hesitate to contact me at any point along the way if you need any more enthusiasm (I can provide tons of that!) and information.

Yours sincerely
